N.C. Restaurants Potentially Expose Hundreds to Hepatitis A

February 22, 2013

The Mecklenberg County Health Department in North Carolina is giving out free vaccines to hundreds of restaurant customers who may have recently been exposed to hepatitis A, WSOC-TV reports. An employee who worked shifts at both the Whiskey Warehouse and Hooters in Concord contracted the disease and potentially exposed customers between February 7 and 13. Health officials are urging anyone who ate or drank at either restaurant during this period to get the shot immediately. The hep A vaccine is only effective if administered within 14 days of infection.
